How to Subjugate High-Speed Power, the Problem-3400 r. p. m. Chalmers, the Answer

The primary object of high-speed engines for motor cars was the attainment of great racing speed.

The hardest thing in building them was to make them safe.

Another difficulty was to combine high engine speed with the feature of all-round performance which is in such imperative demand.

Now comes the remarkable 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers which attains the terrific and supreme engine speed of 3400 revolutions per minute, not only with absolute safety, but with undreamed-of acceleration, and smooth, throbless serenity of performance.

Strength of materials, compact bearing and radiation surfaces, and copious lubrication, are the outstanding features of construction that make this a safe high-speed engine.

By toning down the original might of this whizz of an engine, to a point where the average man or woman dare drive, the elimination of its superfluous energy has been translated into supreme pick-up, velvet smoothness of performance, and an annual saving of from $150 to $200 in gas.

Yet it has speed—anything up to 60 miles an hour as fast as I care to travel in any emergency.

Every gallon of gas I put into the tank of my 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers comes through with 18 miles of sparkling going.

It's fortunate that this magnificent new Chalmers comes to us just when it does. Just now the South is buying motor cars faster than ever before. Our cotton, steel, munitions, and textile industries are sending the smoke of prosperity into the heavens.

The South is more motor-conscious than ever before. The discriminating are buying Chalmers. Bring a blank check when you come to see and feel the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers perform.

Chalmers output is enormously increased. Today deliveries are certain, with slight, if any, delays. But a few weeks hence the dearth of raw materials may curtail the supply of cars. Order now, if you
